How to create usb 3.0 pen drive in windows 8. - iphone 5 jailbreak 8 While there is still a great deal of uncertainty surrounding Google's plans for the TV set, one thing is for sure: Google is working on a set-top box at the company's X labs in Palo Alto, according to a report from eMarketer. While it's being worked on by Google's X-lab in Palo Alto, it's unclear what the device is exactly, and Google has not announced that it has released a set-top box, but one needs to be made if Google wants to play in this arena. The report has said that Google's set-top box would launch in the first half of 2015, but its launch is being pushed back a few months. eMarketer believes that it could launch towards the end of this year or towards the beginning of 2015. If Google is thinking that this device could replace the need to own a cable box, it will be challenging, but despite this, Google is "baking in the assumption that more than a third of American households will buy over-the-top broadband Internet video services, which require no set-top box," according to eMarketer. It seems that a cable box replacement is a longer term goal, but one that Google wants to see in the near term. While there is uncertainty, it's clear that Google wants to find a solution for the TV market. With a search-based system, Google could very well take on both Apple and Amazon and could play a major role in the future of the TV industry.
