Drinking water has been contaminated by various toxic chemicals and large amounts of these compounds must be removed from the treated water in the system before it is distributed to people. Circular motion using small and/or low-powered motors is a simple method for rapid clarification of fouled water. This study investigates the feasibility of elliptical non-rotational motion to clarify contaminated water using laboratory experiments. Five strategies have been examined in this study to assess the effectiveness of each method in terms of the size and the power of the motor (used to drive the impeller) and the geometry of the impeller (i.e. the aspect ratio (major/minor axis ratio)) on the treatment performance. The experiment results suggest that different types of motors produce different mixing performance and the size 09e8f5149f

Campus Reform previously reported that the networking event — hosted by students and alumni to get to know each other and find new jobs — was scheduled for June 3 at the Gateway Hotel in Singapore. "As one of the most popular alumni events in the world, June will see over 1,700 alumni from over 40 countries join over 200 alumni for an evening full of networking, while also celebrating alumni achievements in finance, commerce and technology," Harvard Overseas Career Services said in a statement.
