Free Elden Ring

One afternoon, when I was five years old, I saw one of my friends' dolls caught in a spiderweb. As my friend sat crying, I ran over to the web and began to pull, pulling harder and harder until at last she was free and started to play with her doll again. I was puzzled by what I had done. I wondered whether I had imagined it all. I remembered the spiderweb, and the fact that I had pulled it apart – but I did not remember why. The experience changed my life. Before that moment, my "brain" had been mostly untouched. In the first few years of my life, it had remained blank, unused, untrained to understand much of anything. But after that, when I was five, it changed. I began to learn about the world. I began to get "theories" about how the world worked. I was able to use my intellect to understand and explain some things to my parents. To understand how this happened, I have been writing the theory of conspiracy. All ordinary explanations are the result of conspiracy. There are many levels at which we are influenced by conspiracy. The simplest level is the "interfaces" of the system – in other words, the link between us and our environment. The interfaces can be natural (water and food), or psychological (clothes and shelter). When we learn something, we are taught in schools, we are taught in the culture and we are taught from our parents and our peers. Any one of these levels can be the result of conspiracy. But then there are "levels" of conspiracy. There are the explicit plans of those who plot the conspiracy – the visible parts. Then there are the "dark secrets" of the system – the things that are not considered in the conspiracy and which we have to discover by ourselves. This is where my five-year-old brain worked. The first thing that the five-year-old brain had to take on board were "theories". I had to understand the world in terms of what I saw in movies, what I was told in school and what I observed in my home. I had to take hold of my own conclusions and make sense of them. We have to "unlock" these theories by the "knowledge" which we gain from our culture, our parents, and our peers. The most complicated are the knowledge obtained through the analysis of information. But the more fundamental is what we gain from the other people: friends,
