For example, global positioning systems (GPSs) may be used to provide position coordinates (e.g., latitude and longitude) of a vehicle. Further, police, military, and other government and commercial agencies may employ satellite-based systems to provide information on the presence, location, and/or movements of various objects and vehicles. In some cases, such satellite-based systems may be used to determine if a person is in distress and to determine the location of the person in distress. For example, a first type of satellite-based system may operate to determine the location of the first person in distress, and a second type of satellite-based system may operate to determine the location of a rescue vehicle. However, current satellite-based systems may be slow, inaccurate, e79caf774b
