Plant-derived benzoic acids constitute a large group of plant phytochemicals, which include compounds such as the elenolic acids which are common in many fruits, and the phenolic and cinnamic acids, and some of their derivatives, which are found in plants, fruits, vegetables and grains. Historically, the biogenic benzoic acids have been extracted from plant sources and their isolation has been primarily directed to obtaining the individual compounds to use as individual anti-microbial agents. However, it has been determined that a mixture of benzoic acid compounds can be used with improved antibacterial properties, as disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,559,119. This patent teaches that a combination of a 3,4-dihydroxy benzoic acid (otherwise known as vitamin-C, a compound which is normally found in fruits) with a 3-hydroxybenzoic acid (commonly found in green, unripe apples, strawberries, peaches, citrus fruits) provides a synergistically enhanced activity, as compared with either of these compounds by itself. In the past, it has been quite difficult to manufacture compounds such as 3,4-dihydroxy benzoic acid and 3-hydroxybenzoic acid from naturally-derived sources. Frequently the only practical way to obtain benzoic acid is by treating a precursor compound, such as an ortho-ortho-dimethyl phthalic acid, with gaseous hydrogen chloride at a temperature on the order of about 150°C. to about 300°C. (although the reaction may also be carried out at atmospheric pressure, at lower temperatures), to form the benzoic acid. See, for example, U
